The NHS is changing. Health organisations, local authorities and universities are increasingly working together to help meet the challenges the NHS faces.

New innovations and technology will be part of the solution, and will transform healthcare, as they have all other aspects of society. But developing technology that meets healthcare needs, and works sustainably in a real world environment, takes multidisciplinary teams working across sectors.

This is your opportunity to find out more from local healthcare innovators, academics and clinicians who are looking at new ways to tackle current (and future) problems.

Co-hosted by the University of Portsmouth and Wessex Academic Health Science Network, the Portsmouth Health Innovation Forum will showcase local exciting health innovations from healthcare and academia, and some of the expertise and facilities available in Portsmouth to support this work.
